Memories

To the Editor of the Gazette:

I was quite amused to hear a former great general ("he wasn't much of a president") say there wasn't a Berlin wall under his administration.

He didn't say a word about the Cuba Wall that he tossed in Kennedy's lap when he left the White House. He could have backed Batista and nipped Castro in the bud. Where was the Central Intelligence Agency then? Didn't they see this set-up coming? Now Barry Goldwater and a raft of others want Kennedy to go right in there and take Castro over. But they don't say how. An American invasion of Cuba at this time would trigger off WWII and the terrible loss of life of innocent people. The Republicans sent Castro to the Communist camp in the first place, by slapping the sugar embargo on him. It was supposed to punish him, and have him crawling back. It backfired on them, and now the Democrats have it on their hands.
